Tree Planting

There seems to be an increased interest in the planting of pine seedlings throughout the state, as well as in Appomattox County. The State Nurseries this year expect to have approximately 25 million seedlings available. This is an increase of 14 million over last year.

Those interested in making plantings this year should place their order early since it is expected that the supply will be short.

Identical Twin Calves Wanted

The Experiment Sation at VPI is looking for identical twin calves to be used for experimental work. T y may either be pure-bred or grade. The important thing is that they are identical, which is determined by color, color pattern, head, horns and body length. Usually identical calves are much smaller than normal calves and therefore most farmers like to eliminate them from the herd. If such calves are available in Appomattox County, you should notify the county agent if you are interested in selling them.

Spotted Alfalfa Aphis

A new insect has been found in Virginia that has caused considerable damage to alfalfa in many areas of the country. If was first found in the U. S., in Mexico in 1954, and has now spread to 14 states, west of the Mississippi and 6 in the East. It is estimated that this insect has caused destruction amounting to the millions of dollars to alfalfa stands throughout the southwest. It has been found in 3 counties of Virginia and therefore it is important that we know whether it is present in alfalfa fields in Appomattox County.

Following is a description and further information concerning the insect. Alfalfa growers who think they have found this insect should notify the county agent in order that identification may be made.

The spotted alfalfa aphid is similar in general appearance to other aphids, (plant lice). It is a soft, bodied, oval shaped insert approximately one-sixteenth of an inch in length when mature. The body color, when viewed by the naked eye, appears yellowish - brown due to the presence of several rows of tiny dark spots on the upper side of the body. There are both winged and wingless forms.

Adult females give birth to living young without mating at the rate of 5 or 6 per day. These lightcolored nymphs reach maturity in about 6 days and begin giving birth to living young. This rapid rate of reproduction makes possible the development of very heavy populations within a short time under favorable conditions.

Both nymphs and adults suck the sap from the plants and retard the growth of alfalfa. It is believed that the insects inject a toxic material into the plants while feeding.

Alfalfa begins to turn yellow under conditions of heavy feeding by the aphids. Continued damage by severe infestations usually kills the plants. Leaves on the lower part of the plants die first.

The sticky honeydew secreted by the aphids often causes problems in harvesting. Mowers and rakes become unusuable unless washed frequently and baling equipment can become unamanageable. The sooty mold that often develops on the honeydew may reduce the quality of the hay.

There are no control recommendations for spotted alfalfa aphids on alfalfa in Virginia.

Consider Animal's Needs When Building

Buildings represent one of the longest term, highest priced and least understood investments the average farmer can make. As a rule of thumb on how much to spend for livestock shelters, the specialists suggest capitalizing a rental payment based on the gross return for each animal. Here is an example:

A 500 pound steer bought for 20 cents and sold for 23 cents at 1,000 pounds brings a gross return of $130 — his $230 sale price less the $100 first cost. Annual cost of buildings in a beef enterprise averages about 8 per cent of gross returns. Taking 8 per cent of $130, the result is $10.40 — the portion of gross income from each animal that can be allotted annually to pay for the buildings.

Since the annual cost of buildings — in this case $10.40 — usually equals about 9 per cent of the investment in buildings, the amount per animal that is justifiable for buildings is about $116 ($10.40 divided by 9, times 100). However, this is a breakeven point on the maximum allowable for buildings, not necessarily the most economical figure.

The annual rental paid by the animal — $10.40 in the case just described — must cover many items, including some often overlooked, such as interest on the investment. A point to remember is that any investment for facilities above the actual need of the animals is an economic loss, even if the cost is well below the breakeven point. A cow that produces a $200 calf, for example, does not need twice as much housing as a cow producing a calf worth only $100.

Studies by animal scientists and agricultural engineers over the past half-century indicate that cattle need less housing than many farmers have heretofore considered necessary. Some researchers feel animal shelter should be considered simply as shells, over space, to which may be added the working tools — the equipment, feed mangers, pens and partitions.Built in this fashion, buildings should cost less, permit more labor-saving methods, and be more readily adjustable to changing needs. Research and experience have taught that the one-story shelter barn is the most economical type of building for sheltering beef animals.

In a beef enterprise, as well as in other livestock operations, buildings have a job to do. They should be evaluated with respect to how much they add to production — or how much they lower costs— the same as you would evaluate different feed rations or the purchase of new breeding stock.

New Trench Silo Cover

A new all weather polyethylene film is now being produced to be used as a cover for trench silos. Covers come in sheets 5 to 7 feet wide. These strips are laid down like shingles with about a nine-inch overlap to allow for water run-off.

The 5 to 7 foot width is desirable because it is easily handled and one strip at a time can be removed when the silage is fed out. The sheets are durable, and can be re-used.

If some sand, limestone, chopped weeds or other material is placed on top of the film, it is possible to use the clear polyethylene. However, if nothing is to be placed on top, the black polyethylene films should be used since it screens out the ultra-violet light.

Spoilage of silage is caused by contact with air. If the strips of polyethylene are properly applied, they not only seal off the ensilage from the air, but they also prevent wasteful leaching out of the nutrients.

The film, which is applied directly from the roll, is weighed down with chopped weeds, pieces of scrap lumber, earth, etc., to keep it from blowing and to insure airtight edges and laps.

Winter Pasture Seeding

A well-planned winter - grazing program will provide from 90 to 100 days extra grazing in eastern Virginia, and around 60 days extra grazing in all areas of the state. A winter pasture program also adds flexibility to the total feed program on the farm as it can be used for grazing, silage, or hay after permanent pastures are ready for grazing in the spring.

An acre of a well-fertilized small grain winter pasture will furnish grazing for 3 to 5 cows for a period of 4 to 8 weeks, depending on the season. In recent tests conducted by the VPI Experimental Station, rye and mixtures of rye and barley yielded more than other commonly used mixtures for winter grazing.

Equal parts of rye and barley seeded at the rate of 2 to 4 bushels per acre, should give excellent results. Where adapted, crimson clover will improve the mixture; use 15 pounds per acre. Be sure to inoculate crimson clover seed. Rye alone should be seeded at 2 bushels per acre. Other combinations of small grains, rye grass, and crimson clover are also satisfactory.

Use 600 to 800 pounds per acre of 10-10-10, or the equivalent in other 1-1-1 ratio fertilizer for small grain mixtures or rye grass in which no legume is included. Use the same amount of 5-10-10, 2-12-12, or 0-14-14 for mixtures which include crimson clover.

Vol. Firemen Answered Two Alarms Monday

The volunteer firemen of Appomattox put in two good licks Monday, and saved valuable property in the rural area of the county. The firemen were called out at noon to the farm of J. P. Marshall, R. F. D., Spout Spring. Mr. Marshall's tobacco barn was on fire, and the Appomattox firemen soon snuffed out the blaze, enabling him to save part of his tobacco, the barn itself with only minor damage and an andjoining wheat storage building with several hundred bushels of wheat.

Then, at midnight Monday, the firemen were called to the farm of George Shreaves, near the Charlotte line. A huge hollow tree at his residence and near a barn filled with valuable farm machinery and equipment, was on fire, the hollow serving as a chimney to fan the blaze and send out a blast of fire and sparks. The Appomattox firemen put that out, and prevented what could have been a serious loss.

Despite the fact that Monday was a holiday, the volunteers were very prompt to answer both of the alarms.

1957 Acreage Reserve Program For Winter Wheat Announced

The 1957 Acreage Reserve Program of the Soil Bank, with specific details of its application to those farms where "winter" wheat will be planted this fall, was announced recently by the U. S. Department of Agriculture.

This part of the Soil Bank for the year ahead is being announced in advance of other phases of the programs so that farmers may now complete plans for fall - seeded wheat. Winter wheat producers will have the opportunity to sign Acreage Reserve agreements until Sept. 21, 1956.

Details of the Conservation Reserve part of the Soil Bank will be announced in the near future. This program, under which contracts are made that cover a period of years, will be available for sign-up this fall by those farmers who are in position to start their contract periods in 1956 — as well as for those whose contracts will start with 1957.

The 1957 Acreage Reserve program in Virginia will be administered by the State Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee headed by Chairman Everett D. Duncan. General provisions of the program and their specific application to "winter" wheat seeded this fall as explained by W. T. Powers, State Administrative Officer for the ASC Committee are as follows:

All farmers having acreage allotments for wheat (except for "new farm" allotments), are eligible to participate in the program. To participate, a farmer must sign an agreement with his county Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Committee to reduce his 1957 acreage of wheat entered in the Acreage Reserve below his farm allotment. Farmers entering land in the 1957 program will be offered incentives to designate the same land in future programs.

Participating farmers will receive payments designed to compensate them for the loss of net income from wheat that would have been produced on the acreage placed in the Acreage Reserve. These payments will be based on "normal" crop yield of the land placed in the reserve, the Acreage Reserve unit rate for wheat for the county, and the number of acres placed in the reserve.

Payments will be made to farmers in the form of certificates which may be redeemed for cash or, in the case of farmers who have placed grain land in the Acreage Reserve, for grain.

Acreage placed in the Acreage Reserve may be left idle or a conservation practice may be carried out on it, Powers explained. He noted, however, that it is possible to qualify for Agricultural Conservation Program cost sharing on land in the Acreage Reserve. During 1957, the Acreage Reserve cannot be grazed except by determination of the Secretary of Agriculture as the result of an emergency, or cropped, or cut for hay. Noxious weeds must be controlled on the land.

Farmers entering wheat land in the Acreage Reserve have to comply with all other acreage allotments on their farms to remain eligible for payments.

Violations of an Acreage Reserve agreement may result in its cancellation, and willful grazing or harvesting is subject to a civil penalty of 50 per cent of the payment that would have been made, in addition to loss of the payment.

Ketauver Will Speak at Crewe

Senator Estes Kefauver, candidate for vice-president of the United States, and one of the nation's outstanding leaders of the rural electrification program, will speak at the annual meeting of the Southside Electric Cooperative at Crewe on Saturday morning.

Senator Kefauver notified C. S. Hooper, Jr., manager of the cooperative that he would rearrange his west coast trip in order to get back to the east in time for the meeting.

"I never miss an opportunity to speak to a group of people who are interested in rural electrification," Senator Kefauver stated in his telegram to Mr. Hooper.

Arrangements are being made to take care of 10,000 people for the speech. More than 6,000 were at last year's annual meeting. Besides the members, the public is invited.

Congressman Watkins M. Abbitt, Deputy REA Administrator Fred Strong and Senator Kefauver will be the three featured speakers of this year's program.

O. S. Williams, of Lawrenceville is president of the cooperative, which has more than 15,000 members in 17 Southside Virginia counties.

Jaycess Weiner Roast On Friday Night

The Appomattox Junior Chamber of Commerce will have a weiner roast at L. E. Anderson's lake at 6:30 P. M., Friday, Sept. 7.

The county's two community canneries, one at Appomattox and one at Pamplin, have been having a good canning season. To date 30,025 cans have been put up at Appomattox and 20,858 at the Pamplin cannery.

People from Prince Edward and Charlotte Counties have been using the canneries, as well as from all sections of Appomattox. In the Appomattox cannery, 423 people have registered and canned goods with 263 patrons using the Pamplin cannery through August 31. Many of these patrons have used the cannery two or more times.

While some families are approaching the recommended amounts of canned fruits and vegetables, many are still far short. The Bureau of Human Nutrition and Home Economics, U. S. D. A., recommends about 250 number 2 cans of vegetables and 188 number 3 cans of fruit be canned for a family of four. In addition, about 100 pounds of meat should be put up for each person in the family. These amounts, of course, are only guides, for each family's tastes, needs, and gardens will vary.

A few times during the canning season the canneries have been crowded, but the instructors and supervisors have been working constantly to eliminate bottlenecks and improve the efficiency of operation in the canneries. And it has been proven that patrons bringing in quality fruits and vegetables and following instructions for proper canning have carried away high quality canned foods.

More Hunting, FishingLicenses Sold in 1956

According to Miss Lillian B. Layne, chief of the Fiscal Division of the Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries, returns to the Commission from clerks and agents selling hunting and fishing licenses and permits for the Commission indicated that there was a slight increase in the sale of licenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1956, over the previous year.

There were 539,875 hunting licences an stamps sold during the last fiscal year, which was a 12,656 or 1.02 per cent increase over the previous year.

A total of 447,037 fishing permits were sold during the past fiscal year, which was a 4,408 or 1.01 per cent increase over the previous year.

Around 40 boys have been trying out for the A. H. S. Varsity, and a junior varsity will be selected as soon as school opens and some of the younger boys put in their appearance. Any boy in the 8th, 9th, 10th and 10th grades is eligible for the junior varsity and is urged to try out for the team. Sam Ferguson, who is attending Lynchburg College, will be the junior varsity coach this season.

This year's Blue Hornet team will be composed largely of seniors. The following experienced seniors will likely make the team: Tommie O'Brien, co - captain; John Paulette, co - captain; Buddy Poe, Jack Caldwell, Fountain Conner, Bradley Babcock, Joe Fuller, Clyde Childers, James Carter, and Sam Kerr.
